BEST BET: Race 7 - #8 Necessary
Shipping in for trainer Mike Maker, this filly has been keeping strong company lately. She's taking a drop in class, which we've seen Maker do with a horse who has been consistently close lately but unable to break through to the winners circle (Bern' James Bern in the Sunday nightcap comes to mind). I think there are plenty of questions with the other main contenders in this field, and thus is looks like Necessary is perfectly spotted to get that second career victory.

LONGSHOT: Race 6 - #3 Fergielicious
This is a filly that I've always been a fan of, and she's taking a significant drop in class today. The last time she won was for the $12,500 tag back in May, so it is a very big drop in comparison to what she has been running against lately, but this also is not the easiest $6,250 field that she's going to face. On paper, it looks like there's plenty of speed in this race and I think Fergielicious can sit the perfect stalking trip under Paco Lopez.
